TEST AND UN-CERTIFICATION: TO SHIP IN COMPLIANCE WITH THE LAW.

Distributing and transporting hazardous goods is a matter of big care that we should never underestimate. There are many regulations that give directions about the most suitable packaging.

Especially, the use of UN-certified packaging to ship of dangerous goods is fundamental, but just a few exceptions. Some shippers think they can spare money and choose non-certified boxes, and they risk therefore a block on shipments and hefty penalties. What do we mean here by "certified"? It's a process of validation on a certain packaging, that starts with a series of tests performed by an authorized body and ends up with the issue of a certification by the same organization.

Of course, this implies certain risks: even if two boxes might appear identical, their performance may be different. Everything depends on the professionalism, the attention and the care used when the packaging samples are designed and produced. In order to avoid any incident or problem when shipping and transporting dangerous goods, it is necessary to check thoroughly the certification report issued by the certification body that performed the tests.

This document must contain different instructions, such as: prototype details, packaging use limitations and related marks. Hence, the so-called "test report" is the document that lists all the tests that the packaging had to go through as well as for what

SHIPPING DANGEROUS GOODS

Before shipping dangerous or hazardous materials, get information about regulations and packing requirements by calling the Dangerous Goods hotline at 1.800.GoFedEx 1.800.463.3339. Press "81" or say "dangerous goods." Then press "4" for the next available Dangerous Goods agent. Please do not ship liquids that have strong odors, like essential oils or marinated garlic. If these burst, they can contaminate other shipments.

WHICH LIQUIDS ARE CONSIDERED DANGEROUS?

Some liquids are obviously dangerous or hazardous, like butane, gasoline, jet fuel, nitrogen- refrigerated liquid, and some chemicals. Others aren't so obvious but can still be dangerous, like aerosol sprays, dry ice, lighter fluid, nail polish, nail polish remover, paint, perfume, and solvents. This isn't an exhaustive list, so if you have questions, contact the Dangerous Goods hotline.

SHIPPING ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES

Alcoholic beverage shipping is highly regulated. Shipping rules are different based on the shipment's origin and destination. If you're an individual consumer, you cannot ship alcohol. If you're a business, you need appropriate alcohol licenses, and you must be enrolled in the FedEx Alcohol Shipping Program to ship to your customers in approved states and countries. Learn more about shipping alcohol or see our wine packaging guidelines
